I became a teacher to make a difference. I wanted to be able to provide a classroom where all students strived for their best, whatever that might be for each child. I believe that students need to set manageable goals. Goals help students to aim for better and push themselves. If you aim for nowhere- that is just where you'll go.

All students have the ability to learn. It is my job to find the methods that work best for each child. I especially enjoy getting students ready for high school. Making sure that students become independent, responsible learners is a big job. I try to help them develop study and work skills that enable them to find success. When students return to St. John's and tell me how much they enjoy high school or how easily they have transitioned, I feel I have done well.
