I believe that my responsibility as a teacher is to provide the guidance and encouragement each child needs to develop the knowledge and skills that will help him or her succeed. Each child is unique, especially in how he or she learns best. I draw from my own experiences as a student, and from research and best practices, to create an environment in which each child can grow as an individual. I try to involve students in decisions in the classroom to foster independence and to encourage students to feel ownership over their education. Middle school students have a lot to say, and I aim to help my students develop their voices, through speaking, listening, reading, and writing, so that they can become articulate, well-educated citizens of society.

I feel blessed to teach in a Catholic school where God is at the center. I love that my job encompasses more than just academics; as a teacher at St. John the Evangelist, I have the opportunity to help children develop socially and spiritually, as well. Prayer, games, discussions, and questions are all a part of the classroom as we build a community of Catholics searching for knowledge and truth.
