Ask Father!

Q: Dear Father John, Why do you cover the chalice with the cardboard square and cloth after Communion? What are those items called and what is the significance?

A: Since the Precious Body and Blood of Our Lord are kept in the chalice and paten, it is important that we treat these sacred vessels with respect. Keeping in mind G.I.R.M. 327, we use the chalice veil, paul, and purificator to ensure that the chalice and paten are properly dignified and maintained. The chalice veil is the colorful cloth that covers the chalice - it usually matches the priest's vestments. It reminds us that the chalice is not an ordinary cup but a vessel dedicated exclusively to the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass. The paul is the stiff board that sits atop the paten so that the chalice veil properly hangs over the chalice. The paten is the small metal disk that holds the host that the priest consumes at Mass. The purificator is the cloth that is used to purify the vessels following communion. - Fr John

The Lord be with you!

As we continue our Lenten journey, we ought to reflect on how to deepen our spiritual lives. Any such meditation should go over sin, God's Mercy, and penance. When we remember how sin damages our spiritual lives, how God's mercy restores them, and how penance improves them, we can better cooperate with God's grace.

All of us sin. Nowadays the sins of others are regularly announced hourly on the news. When people do apologize for their own sins, it is almost always for "damage control": celebrities and politicians admit their wrongs only to increase their fame or prevent it from declining. Accordingly, sin is treated externally by the world and thus little lasting progress is made against it. Since sin affects us mostly by disordering our souls and bodies, we need interior change and maturation.*

The worst disorder that sin can work is turning our hearts and wills away from God. The hardened sinner no longer even seeks repentance from God because his heart has chosen a false god to worship. We too endanger ourselves whenever we sin. Mortal sins kill our interior life by preventing our hearts from resting in God whereas venial sin slows the flow of God's grace within us. Habitual venial sin weakens our spiritual lives like a heart disease clogs our arteries. When our spiritual arteries are blocked up, simply continuing to live in God's grace requires a great deal of effort.

Because sin reduces our spiritual health so severely, we require the aid of God's mercy. What our hearts and minds cannot do by themselves they can cooperate with grace to achieve. When God forgives us our sins, He first remits the debt that we owe Him. Secondly, He restores our spiritual health to what it was before we sinned. Thirdly, and this is key, He offers us the help to improve our interior life so that we sin less.

That opportunity for spiritual growth is penance. Voluntarily praying, fasting, or doing works of mercy are how we merit an increase in actual grace. Although God supplies us with sanctifying grace by the sacraments in overabundance of what we need, He tends to give us actual grace only in so far as we desire Him. It is actual grace that strengthens us against temptation and deepens our love for God.

We will be discussing the interplay of Divine Mercy and our penance more on Wednesday, March 7th, at 7:00pm at Ss. Peter and Paul. I hope to see many of you there. For those who cannot make it, let us end with this thought: God desires to save us with us. After God had forgiven all our sins upon the Cross, He could have brought history to a close and ended the world. Instead, He has allowed us to cooperate in His work of salvation. May we desire ardently our own sanctification - our personal share in God's Mercy - so that we can spread that Mercy to all the world.

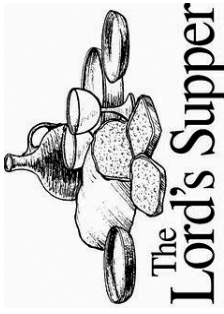

In Christ,

Fr. John

*Sin does effect our bodies by strengthening our appetites against the control of our limited wills. For example, the glutton will have a harder time controlling his hunger the more he overeats because his appetite for food and drink has been increased.
