

The background of the entire image is a vibrant, abstract cosmic scene. It features swirling bands of purple, blue, orange, and red, resembling nebulae or galactic structures. Scattered throughout are numerous small, glowing stars and larger, soft-edged circular light spots in various colors like purple, blue, and orange. In the center of the image is a large, circular representation of the Earth. The Earth's surface is depicted with a fiery, molten texture in shades of orange, yellow, and red. Overlaid on this fiery globe is a human face, specifically the upper half including the eyes, nose, and mouth. The face is rendered in a golden-yellow, metallic-looking style. A bright white crosshair, consisting of a vertical and a horizontal line, is superimposed over the face and the Earth. The text is contained within a white rectangular box at the bottom center of the image.

THE SET-UP

The whole dating game has obviously changed dramatically with dating apps. Modern singles strongly prefer going online, where the perfect person is just a click away. They have more control, many more options and a lot more information about potential mates.

In the past, finding a partner was more of a group effort. Potential matchmakers included family, friends, co-workers and fellow group members. If someone you knew and trusted believed that there was someone you should meet, that was worth checking out.

One of the relatively newer issues is the larger number of older singles. For them, it's very difficult to meet other singles with whom they have much in common. So going online might be the best option.

Interestingly, the latest trend reflects a drop in online dating and an increase in dating with help from friends and family. This was especially true of college students. I also read about a group in New York which formed a "Blind Date Club," where an evening activity would be scheduled at which each person in the group would bring a date for another group member.

A friend of mine from India told me that his marriage was arranged by the parents of him and his wife. When I asked him about the role romance played in this arranged marriage, he said "When you live marriage the way God wants you to, He blesses you with romance."
