

Haiti - House #181 The Mario Salomon Family

Mario Salomon and his wife, Eunide Armand are shown in the “before” with their four children and a nephew they care for standing in front of the crumbling shack they have been calling home. They live mostly on farm products that they produce on their small plot of land. Mario is also a stone mason, working when there is work available. Eunide sells the products of their garden in the public markets in Jeremie. They are able to come to church occasionally but they see that their children attend Sunday Mass regularly. They send their prayerful appreciation to all that have helped to get them out of a very difficult situation and into a lovely new home.
