The first two readings go hand in hand in describing the experience of the early church. The first three words of the first reading are key: “They devoted themselves” (Acts 2:42). Members of the early church were nothing if not devoted. They devoted themselves to learning from the apostles, to living communally with other Christians (the word they’d started using to describe their identity), to prayer, to worship, and to the Eucharist. They also devoted themselves to making sure that everything they had was divided equitably among them so that no one was in need, to meeting together to share and strengthen their faith, to eating together as Jesus had with the apostles, and to growing in number.

The second reading hints at the persecution they faced. But they were able to endure the trials they suffered because of their faith: a certainty of their salvation, which they called “a living hope . . . to an inheritance that is imperishable, undefiled, and unfading” (1 Peter 1:3–4). No wonder they experienced “an indescribable and glorious joy” (1 Peter 1:8).

Jesus returned to his disciples in a glorified body, but his body still had the wounds from the cross, wounds that could be seen, felt, and probed. Wounds remain on the Body of Christ still. These are real wounds that are visible and palpable. These are wounds that still need healing. Pope Francis famously described the Church as a field hospital, where the wounded and ill are treated and restored to health. We are called to do this. We are called to heal the wounds of the body of Christ.

“As the Father has sent me, so I send you,” Jesus tells his disciples after greeting them and offering them peace (John 20:21). Years before, Jesus had taught the disciples to pray that the Father’s will be done here on earth. The Father’s will in sending Jesus was to win our salvation by suffering and dying for our sins. Now Jesus is sending us on a mission in accordance with the Father’s will. Before he ascends to be with the Father forever, he tells his disciples to make disciples of all nations. God created every one of us for a reason and Jesus is telling us what it is. As he did what he was sent to do, so must we.

Pope Leo XIV's April Intention

For priests in crisis

Let us pray for priests going through moments of crisis in their vocation, that they may find the accompaniment they need and that communities may support them with understanding and prayer.

April is dedicated to the Holy Eucharist.
