

INTRODUCTION TO THE BIBLE

*In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with God and the Word was God ...
The Word was made flesh and lived among us. (John 1:1, 14)*

This sacred synod...exhorts all the Christian faithful...to learn "the surpassing knowledge of Jesus Christ" by frequently reading of the divine scriptures. "Ignorance of Scripture is ignorance of Christ." (Dei Verbum 25)

Prior to the Second Vatican Council (1962-1965), the Bible was often seen by Catholics as a Protestant book. Catholics were not encouraged to read the Bible lest they misinterpret it. The fear of misinterpretation was a very real one when we consider the number of times Christianity has been divided because of biblical interpretation.

Since Vatican II, there has been an explosion of interest in the Bible amongst Catholics. Today, many Catholics read and pray the scriptures as a form of spiritual nourishment. Most parishes have Bible study groups.

Despite the new-found interest in the Bible, many Catholics still do not read scripture. Why? There are many reasons. One of them is because the Bible is not an easy book to understand. If one begins reading the Old Testament, one will quickly encounter several genealogical lists of unpronounceable names or whole chapters about ritual regulations which can quickly diminish one's enthusiasm for Scripture reading. If that is not enough, passages about God commanding the Israelites to wipe out whole villages of people may cause one to run elsewhere for spiritual inspiration.

The purpose of this series of articles is to offer the reader a commentary or reading guide on each of the 46 books of the Old Testament. The commentaries will state the purpose and meaning of each book and comment on each chapter, especially the difficult and important texts. This article summarizes a lot of background information that one will find in introductory books on the Bible. More specifically, in this article, we will look at:

- How the Bible Came To Be

Small Library of Books

The word "bible" comes from the Greek word "ta biblia" meaning "the books." So while the Bible is, in a real sense, only one book, it is, in another real sense, a small library of 73 books written by different authors, using very different writing styles, and composed over a span of almost a thousand years in three different languages: Hebrew, Aramaic and Greek. The Old Testament contains books written from the tenth century BC to the second century BC. The twenty-seven books of the New Testament were written between 40AD and 110AD. Despite the rich diversity of the Bible, the 73 very different pieces of literature are deeply connected by the story of God's love for Israel and the Church.

The 46 books of the Old Testament tell us about God's relationship with Israel before the time of Christ. The 27 books of the New Testament describe the new relationship that God began with all people through Jesus when he lived on earth. It also describes the establishment of the Church.

Since the books of the Old Testament were written in Hebrew, they are also called the Hebrew Scriptures. The Old Testament is not "old" in the sense of outdated. God's Word is never outdated. Rather, it is "old" because it is the story of how God first made his covenant with his Chosen People. The New Testament does not cancel the message of the Old Testament, but carries it forward.

How the Bible Came To Be

The Bible, as we have it today, is the result of a five-step process which we will now describe briefly.

Saving events. The Bible grew out of a series of saving events during which God entered human history. Some of these key events were: the call of Abraham, Exodus, Sinai Covenant, entrance into the Promised Land, establishment of a monarchy in Israel, Babylonian Exile, return of the exiles, Rededication of the Temple, coming of Jesus, his preaching and miracles, his death, Resurrection and Ascension, coming of the Holy Spirit, and beginning of the Church. All of these events happened within a community. Gradually, they were seen as events in which God revealed himself to his people and invited them to enter into a covenant relationship with him.

Oral tradition. The second stage in the formation of the Bible is called oral tradition. Through it, the memory and the meaning of the saving events were transmitted from one generation to another. Story-telling, poems, songs and rituals were all part of oral tradition.

We may wonder about the accuracy of oral tradition. How do we know that the stories told and retold were faithfully transmitted? Oral tradition is reliable because it is the product of the community. Thus, for example, if a child in the early Christian community prayed: “Our Father, who art in heaven, Harold be they name,” such a mistake would not be passed on because the community would correct it.

Written tradition. Eventually, parts of the oral tradition were written down in a variety of ways: stories, sayings, poems, songs and narratives. But the fact that some things started to be written down did not mean that oral tradition ceased. It didn’t. Both continued side by side.

Edited tradition. This stage involved gathering together pieces of the oral and written tradition and formulating them in such a way that they spoke to the lives of the people who lived during the period when the editing process occurred.

Canonical tradition. This refers to the process by which some sacred writings became a book of the Bible, while some did not. More on this step later in this article.

One other point to note is the fact that the Bible was first divided into chapters in the early part of the thirteenth century by Stephen Langton. Division into verses was introduced by a printer, Robert Estienne, in 1551. So if we made a reference to “John 3:16” prior to the twelfth century, people would not know what we were talking about.

Revelation, Inspiration, Inerrancy and Canon

When we begin to study the Bible, four very important words or terms that we will come across frequently are revelation, inspiration, inerrancy and canon. These four terms give the Bible its special authority. We will now look at each of these terms as they apply to the Bible.

Revelation. The term revelation refers to God’s desire to reveal himself to us and invite us into friendship with him. The Catechism of the Catholic Church (51) states: It pleased God, in his goodness and wisdom, to reveal himself and to make known the mystery of his will. His will was that people should have access to the Father, through Christ, the Word made flesh, in the Holy Spirit, and thus become sharers in the divine nature.

Divine inspiration. The word “inspiration” is a word that we use rather loosely today. We speak of poetic and artistic inspiration and inspired speeches and sermons. What is meant by biblical inspiration? The word “inspiration” comes from the Latin word “inspirare” which means “to breathe upon” or “God-breathed”. The Catechism of the Catholic Church states that biblical inspiration is an action of God upon human authors to write only what God wants written. When St. Paul says that “all scripture is inspired by God” (2 Tim 3:16) he means that these sacred writings have been breathed into by God, in-spired by God, are the product of the breath or spirit of God.

Inspiration does not mean “verbal dictation”, God whispering into the ear of the human author telling him what to write. The human authors were most likely unaware that they were being inspired. Sometime later the faith community came to recognize certain writings as the inspired word of God.

The human author wrote freely as any human author would, in the style and idiom of his own time, using literary forms and images that would be familiar to the audience of that time. Yet all the while, the human author was freely writing, he was writing only what God wanted written. Being inspired did not remove the author’s human limitations when he was writing. As we read the books of the Bible, we will see that some writers are more skilled than others. Neither did inspiration remove inaccurate information that the human author had regarding history or geography.

In an effort to explain biblical inspiration, some writers compare the divine word of God in the Bible and incarnate Word of God that became flesh in Jesus. In his book, Set My Exiles Free, Fr. John Power writes: “At the incarnation Mary is over-shadowed by the power of the Most High; in inspiration the writer is overshadowed by the Spirit of God. Christ has divine and human parentage – God and Mary; the Bible has divine and human authors – God and inspired men. God made use of Mary’s human nature to bring forth the Word-made-flesh; similarly, God makes use of the author’s human talents to create an inspired book. . . .” No wonder that some of the early Christian writers spoke of two incarnations of God’s Word, one in human nature, the other in human language (P. 21).

Inerrancy. Biblical inerrancy means that the Bible is a trustworthy guide on the road to salvation. The Vatican II document on Divine Revelation (11) states that the books of the Bible teach “firmly, faithfully and without error the truth recorded in the sacred writings for the sake of our salvation.” So Catholic belief about biblical inspiration and inerrancy does not mean that the human authors are going to be accurate when it comes to all historical and geographical facts, but it does mean that the essentials of the faith, whether in the Jewish or Christian tradition, are kept intact with divine assurance. When reading the Bible, we must keep in mind that the authors were not teaching history, but religious truth.

Canon. The term “canon” means “measuring stick.” A canon is a measuring stick or ruler used to decide what does and does not fit. Originally, when applied to the Bible, the term canon referred to the measuring stick by which a sacred writing was judged to be divinely inspired and accepted or not accepted as a book of the Bible. Today the term canon refers to the 73 books of the Bible, the collection of sacred writings by which the Church’s faith can be measured.

How was the canon of Scripture decided? In his book, Introduction to the Bible, Stephen Binz writes: “It was not at all clear to the people of God which of the many writings of the Israelite and Christian communities were to be accepted as the word of God. The books that eventually became part of the Bible had no particular glow that set them apart from the rest. Even the need for a distinctive collection of books was not at all evident to the Jewish and Christian communities for a long time.” (p. 68)

The canonical status of the books of the Old Testament was not decided by the Jews until the end of the first century AD. The Jewish canon did not contain the seven books that Catholics have in their Old Testament canon. In 393AD at the Council of Hippo, church leadership decided which sacred writings in circulation at the time should be admitted into the canon of the New Testament.

How did church leadership decide which books to admit into the New Testament canon? In general, we can say that the decision was based on which books best captured the vision and message of Christ, which books best nurtured the faith of the people. More specifically, a book was accepted into the canon of the New Testament because of its apostolicity (the book was written by an apostle or an early church figure), orthodoxy (the book reflected the authentic beliefs of early Christianity), continuity (the book had a link with the beginnings of Christianity).

Why Catholic bibles have seven extra books

The Hebrew Bible written by Jewish authors/editors contains thirty-nine books. When this Bible was translated into Greek for Greek-speaking Jews who lived outside of Judah in the third and second century B.C., seven other books were added, resulting in forty-six books in the Old Testament. The Greek translation of the Hebrews became known as the Septuagint because it was believed to have been written by seventy writers.

The seven additional books are Judith, Tobit, Baruch, Wisdom, Sirach and 1 & 2 Maccabees—often called the deuterocanonical (second canon) books because there was a certain reluctance by the church to admit these books into the canon of scripture. Furthermore, the Greek edition has larger versions of the books of Esther and Daniel. While the early Christians primarily used the Septuagint version of the Hebrew Scriptures, many Jews did not. Protestants call the deuterocanonical book apocrypha, which ascribes the writings to human authorship rather than divine inspiration.

Reacting to the increasing numbers of Greek-speaking Jewish community members who were converting to Christianity, the Jews, especially under the guidance of rabbis who had survived the destruction of Jerusalem in 70 A.D., began to teach that only the Hebrew language could be the language of the inspired Word of God, differentiating themselves from the Christians. As a result, from the second and third centuries A.D., only the Hebrew version of the Old Testament was held to be canonical by the vast majority of Jews.

Many centuries later when Protestant Reformation leader Martin Luther translated the Bible, he used the Hebrew canon of the Old Testament which did not contain the seven above-mentioned books. The Catholic Church continued to retain the Septuagint version of the Old Testament, believing all forty-six books to be divinely inspired. The seven books are recognized as good books. The primary distinction in modern times is that they are used liturgically in the Roman Catholic Church but not by the Jews and Protestants.

The Vulgate Bible. In the fourth century, St. Jerome translated the Greek Bible into Latin for the “common people” of the Roman Empire who could only speak and read Latin. The Latin word “vulgus” means common people.

The Catholic Approach to Biblical Interpretation

The interpreter must investigate what meaning the sacred writer intended to express and actually expressed in particular circumstances as he used contemporary literary forms in accordance with the situation of his own time and culture. (Dei Verbum 12)

The Bible is God’s word and man’s word. One must understand man’s word in order to understand the word of God. (Introduction to the New American Bible, p. 22)

Studying the Bible is not easy because it involves reading a book written over many centuries by people living in a variety of cultures, using many different literary forms. We can get a small inkling of what it is like to read and understand an ancient piece of literature by imagining what it would be like for an ancient Israelite or an early Christian to read some of our literature or announcements. Take a contemporary news article that begins, “The White House announced today...” An ancient reader would need to understand the meaning of “White House” in contemporary America. We might also consider how the announcement might be looked upon and interpreted if it came from the Reagan White House or the Obama White House.

The Word of God written in the words of humans.

Many stories and teachings of the Bible are easy to understand even if they are not easy to live. For example, when Jesus says we should forgive, be loving, and share our possessions with the poor, we know what he is asking of us. Also, we can read many of the psalms and be comforted by them.

But there are many other sayings and passages in the Bible that are not so easy to understand. For example, when Jesus says in Luke’s Sermon on the Plain (6:20-21): “Blessed are you who are poor, hungry and weeping,” is Jesus saying that poverty, hunger and grieving are blessings that we should be happy about? Or when we read the book of Jonah, are we meant to believe that Jonah spent three days in the belly of a whale? In Samuel 15:2-4, God commands King Saul to wipe out a whole village, sparing no one. How are we to understand and interpret this act of heavenly terrorism? The above examples should make it very clear that we need help when it comes to biblical interpretation and that not all passages can be read literally.

Historical-critical approach to the Bible. When it comes to the study of the Bible, our goal is twofold: to search out what a biblical text meant for its original author and audience, and what it means for us readers today. Because of the great advances in biblical scholarship in the past hundred years or so, students of the Bible today are much better equipped to get at the meaning and message of particular texts than students in previous generations.

When it comes to Bible study today, students in all mainline Christian churches use what is called the historical-critical method. The method is called historical because it focuses on the original historical settings of biblical texts and the historical processes that gave rise to them. It is called critical because it applies reason to the texts and uses every means available to better understand what the original author intended to communicate. In short, the historical-critical approach to biblical interpretations seeks to get at what a particular text was saying to its original audience and to make clear its significance then and now.

Distinguishing the intended meaning from the apparent meaning. The apparent meaning of Genesis chapter one is that God created the world in six days. The intended meaning, among other things, was that God and God alone created the world and that he created it good. The apparent meaning of Luke’s Sermon on the Plain is that God is happy when people are poor, hungry and sad. The intended meaning is that God is happy when humans place their trust in him especially when they are poor, hungry and sad. The historical-critical approach to Scripture helps us to distinguish the apparent meaning of a text from its intended meaning.

Scholars using the historical-critical approach to Scripture do not try to impose a twenty-first century western mentality on a piece of literature written in a very different time and place.

Biblical fundamentalism and its dangers. Biblical fundamentalists believe like us that the Bible is the inspired Word of God. What they tend to forget or ignore is that the inspired Word of God also has human authors who expressed themselves in a variety of ways to communicate their message. Fundamentalists tend to believe that the meaning of a particular biblical text is self-evident. They will often confuse the apparent meaning of a text with its intended meaning. As mentioned earlier, one of the apparent meanings of Genesis is that God actually created the world in six days. But as we shall see in the next article, the intended meaning of the author was something very different.

Biblical literalists place such emphasis on the divinely inspired dimension of the Bible that they tend to deny or ignore the human dimension—the historical context and the literary forms used to convey religious truth. The Catholic approach to the Bible seeks to hold together and respect both the transcendent or the divine character of the Bible and its human formulations. It seeks to interpret a text in a way that is faithful to both its human and divine authorship.

Pause: Can you see why it would be easy to confuse the apparent meaning of a text with its intended meaning?

Does all of the above mean that one needs to be a Scripture scholar to read Scripture? Of course not. Just as one does not need to be an expert in musical composition to appreciate music, one does not need to be an expert in Scripture to appreciate and benefit from reading God’s Word. Yet, just as courses in musical composition will enhance our appreciation of music, so will Bible study enhance our understanding and appreciation of God’s Word. It will also save us from misinterpreting it and imposing a twenty-first century western mentality on texts written in another time and place.

Reading the Bible within the Church. The Church is the mother of the Bible, especially the New Testament. For 2,000 years she has been meditating and studying the scriptures. Therefore, we do well to study the Bible with the guidance of the Church and its scholars. We are blessed today to have many easy-to-read introductions to the Bible and commentaries on its individual books. As we study the Bible, we will discover that the Church very rarely states that “this is the only meaning of a particular text.” What it may sometimes state is that a particular interpretation is misguided or incorrect.

Inner Unity of the Bible

Even though the Bible has a rich diversity—comprising 73 books written over a period of a thousand years, with many different writing styles and in three languages—it also contains a deep inner unity.

- God is the author of both the Old and New Testaments.
- Covenant love. The word testament means covenant. Both the Old and New Testaments are a testament to God’s covenant love for Israel and the Church.
- A book with Christ at its center. Since the earliest days of the Church, Christians have read the Old Testament from the perspective of Christ. He is the one who fulfills the expectations and promises of the first covenant.

Jesus taught his disciples to see salvation history as pointing to him. When he joined two disciples on the road to Emmaus, he demonstrated his way of understanding the Old Testament or Hebrew scriptures: “Then beginning with Moses and all the prophets, he interpreted to them the things about himself in all scriptures” (Lk 24:27). In the fifth century, St. Augustine expressed the deep relationship between the two parts of Scripture when he wrote: “The New Testament lies hidden in the Old, and the Old Testament is unveiled in the New.”

- Typology. Typology is another way of looking at how the Old and New Testaments are connected. Hence, we would say the waters of the Great Flood are a type of the waters of Baptism. Since the early centuries of Christianity, early Church Fathers and biblical scholars have pointed out how many events in the Old Testament foreshadow or point to events in the New Testament. For example, the manna in the desert foreshadows the Eucharist. Isaac carrying the wood up the hill foreshadows Christ carrying the wood of the cross. When an occurrence in history points to a parallel occurrence in the future, we call the earlier event a type of the later event.

Summary of Salvation History

The Bible tells the story of how God entered history to save humanity from sin and destruction, and to invite us to a new and eternal life in Christ. When we study history from God's perspective, it is called salvation history—the history or story of God's saving love. Before we proceed to the individual books of the Bible, we will look at the big picture or an overview of salvation history, sometimes called "Salvation History Timeline." Following the Breakthrough Bible for Young Catholics, we will divide our salvation story into eight blocks of time. The dates given, especially in the first blocks of the story, are of course very approximate.

Block #1: Primeval History—Beginning of Time to 2000BC (Genesis chapters 1-11). The first eleven chapters of Genesis tell us about the creation of the world, the fall of the first man and woman, and the spread of sin. The first eleven chapters of the Bible are often referred to as "primeval" history because they deal with events that occurred before recorded history.

Block #2: The Patriarchs—2000BC to 1700BC (Genesis chapters 12-50). In this period of salvation history, God comes into the life of a nomad called Abraham and enters into a covenant relationship with him. God promises Abraham that his and his wife's descendants will be as numerous as the stars of the sky and will inherit a land of their own—the Promised Land. The rest of Genesis tells the story of Abraham and Sarah's son, Isaac, their grandsons, Jacob and Esau, and great-grandsons, Joseph and his brothers. Jacob's twelve sons become the Founding Fathers of the Twelve Tribes of Israel. The term Patriarchs omits the role of these men's wives in salvation history, without whom God's story would not have moved forward. The names of the matriarchs are Sarah, Rebecca, Rachel and Leah.

Block #3: Egypt and the Exodus—1400BC to 1250BC (Bible Book, Exodus). At the beginning of the book of Exodus, we discover that the descendants of Jacob's children—now called Israelites—are in slavery in Egypt. God hears their cries for freedom and calls Moses to lead the people out of Egypt.

On their way to the Promised Land, the people stop at Mount Sinai where God extends the covenant he made with Abraham to all the Israelites. Then he gives Moses the Ten Commandments which spell out how the people are to relate to God and each other. During their journey through the desert, the people complain and lose faith in God. As a result, they wander in the desert for forty years before they enter the Promised Land.

Block #4: Conquest of the Promised Land, Era of the Judges—1250BC to 1050BC (Bible Books, Joshua and Judges). Moses dies before the Israelites enter the Promised Land. God calls a new leader, Joshua, to lead the people into the land, much of which is inhabited by other people. The Israelites must fight to gain control of the land. When they trust God, they are successful in their battles; when they do not trust God, they fail. Eventually they gain control of the land, and each of the twelve tribes is given its own section of the land.

New invaders, the Philistines, try to capture the land. At this time, the Israelites have no king because God is their ruler. But God calls special prophets and warriors, called Judges, to help deliver justice and defend the land against the Philistine invasion.

Block #5: The Monarchy, Kingdoms of Judah and Israel—1050BC to 587BC (Bible Books, 1 & 2Samuel, 1 & 2Kings). At the end of the period of the Judges, the Israelites want their own king. God reluctantly answers their plea. He has Samuel—the last of the Judges—anoint Saul as the first king of Israel. David follows Saul as the next king. David is a mighty warrior and unites all the twelve Tribes into one kingdom. David's son, Solomon, builds a Temple at Jerusalem, the capital city.

After Solomon's death, there is disagreement between the tribes, and the kingdom splits in two. Israel is the name of the northern kingdom and Judah the southern kingdom. Many of the kings of Israel and Judah worship foreign gods and allow injustice in the kingdom. So God raises up prophets (e.g. Amos, Hosea and Isaiah) to call the people to obey their Covenant with God.

Block #6: Exile and Return—587BC to 1AD (Bible Books, Ezra, Nehemiah and 1 Maccabees). Despite the prophets' warnings, the people of Israel and Judah continue to turn away from God's covenant with them. So God let their kingdoms be conquered. Israel is conquered by the Assyrians in 721BC. Judah is conquered by the Babylonians in 587BC. Many of the people are taken into captivity, so this period is called the Exile. Prophets like Ezekiel comfort the Israelites with the promise that God is still with them. Seventy years pass in exile. Then King Cyrus allows the people—now called Judeans or Jews—to return to rebuild Jerusalem and the Temple. The people see God's hand at work.

When Alexander the Great comes along, the Greeks rule Israel. About 150BC the Maccabees, a Jewish family, leads a successful revolt against the Greeks to restore Jewish independence. During this troubled time, the people are hoping for a messiah, or savior, to make them great again.

Block #7: Life, Death and Resurrection of Jesus—1AD to 33AD (Bible Book, Luke). God never abandons his Chosen People even though they often do not keep their part of the covenant. In the fullness of time, God sends his only Son, Jesus, into the world. When Jesus is born, the Romans rule Israel. Some of the Jews are hoping for a mighty warrior-king like David who will drive the Romans out. Instead, Jesus shows a different way. He preaches love, justice, and forgiveness. He heals and works miracles as signs of God's power.

Jesus' followers, called disciples, come to see that he is the Messiah, the Savior. Jesus shows that salvation comes through faith and a change of heart, not through violence and political power. When Jesus is killed by the Romans—with the approval of the Jewish leaders—his followers think that all is lost. Instead, after three days, God raises Jesus from the dead!

Block #8: Early Christian Church—33AD to 100AD (Bible Book, Acts of the Apostles). After his Resurrection, Jesus instructs his closest followers, the Apostles, to go and spread the Good News of salvation to all people. After Jesus ascends to heaven, Peter and the other Apostles receive the Holy Spirit who gives them the courage to tell others about Jesus Christ. They start by first preaching to other Jews. Sometimes they are persecuted by Jewish leaders who do not believe in Jesus.

One of those persecutors—whose name is Paul— has a vision of Jesus and becomes a Christian. God reveals to Paul that Christ has come for all people. Paul begins preaching to non-Jews, who are called Gentiles. Wherever he travels, he starts new Christian communities and is helped by many other believers, women and men. Soon Christianity spreads through the whole Roman Empire—even to Rome. (For overview of the Bible Story, I relied heavily on the Salvation History Timeline given in Break-Through, The Bible for Young Catholics (p. XI-XV).

Which Bible to read. We are blessed today with many wonderful translations of the Bible. The following two are especially worth looking into:

The New American Bible Revised Edition (2011) is the translation used in our Sunday readings at Mass. It has good introductions to each book of the Bible and some footnotes.

The New Jerusalem Bible is very popular today amongst students of the Bible. It has good introductions to each book of the Bible and much more extensive footnotes than the New American Bible. Many of the biblical books, laid out in poetic style, makes for easy reading and therefore allows for personal side notes.
